Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: the arguments are not persuasive. The applicant argues that Akram fails to teach connecting pads to a flexible cable having a conductive pattern. However, Fig. 1D of Akram discloses conductive patterns 26 on the flexible cable. Furthermore, the applicant argues that the support 330 of Akram cannot be a substrate. The applicant relies on a narrow definition of substrate from www.semiconductor-technology.com to argue this point. On the contrary, the term "substrate" is by no means limited to a semiconductor wafer, and those familiar with the art will recognize that the term may encompass a support structure made from a variety of materials. For example, the present invention utilizes a support substrate Fig. 4, 302..
